

The forecast with the most containment scored worst

Lower is better on both axes; a filled marker is the best interval score

Containment is whether the observed count fell inside the 95% interval. The rolling-origin forecast is scored at four separate origins; the two sharp forecasts at three consecutive target years of one trajectory, so the counts are not directly comparable. The interval score charges for width and for missing, so containment cannot be bought.

Source: interval_honesty_scorecard.csv